

Hurt By Stone-Throwing Boys

All Roads Lead To Tinley Park Next Week End

The Committee in charge of arrangements for the Tinley Park Centennial Celebration reports that the program has been completed and fun is assured all who visit Tinley Park during the three day celebration Oct. 5, 6 and 7.

Beginning Friday evening at 8 o'clock, the program will get under way with games, rides, entertainment, fun and all the trimmings that go with the celebration of the 100th birthday of Tinley Park.

The highlights of the celebration include entertainment by a troupe bringing back the old days and the early history of the community. Also a part of the fun will be provided by the key-stone cop who is never relaxed and who keeps constant vigil so that laws are not broken—perhaps the laws are outmoded, maybe they don't make sense—but they are laws and add to the fun of the celebration. The old time dances are to be featured and a steady progression of the evolution of the dance right down to the present day jitterbug. Games of all kinds will be available for the visitors to enjoy. Food will be plenty and a good variety has been planned so that no one needs to go hungry. Snacks of all kinds will also be available.

The climax of the celebration will come on Sunday afternoon when festivities get underway with a ball game of oldsters at 12 o'clock between Tinley Park and Harvey. This game will be played at Memorial Park. Following the ball game will be the great parade depicting the contrast between the old and the new. The parade features many outstanding old time vehicles. The old Surry will be there, the oldest truck in the community will be in the parade. Newer vehicles will give a contrast and a clear picture of progress of the 100 year period. Included in the parade will be the famous six horse hitch of Wilson and Company. This team will pull on a special show at Memorial Park immediately following the parade. The most modern means of travel, the airplane will take part in the parade when three planes from Prosper Airport will join the rest of the show.

During the three days there will be opportunity for all to win prizes and to enter contests for cash prizes. The Beard growing contest will be judged at the fair grounds sometime during the last day so that the beard growers may have every possible minute to keep those whiskers sprouting. The guessing contest on the six horse hitch will get underway on Sunday. The horses will be stable behind Saenger Hall so that everyone may see them and get a good look so that their guess will be right in there with the winners.

Everyone is assured fun at every turn of the program.

REVIEW "MERCHANT OF YONKERS"

Unique farce delights Audience

The comedy "Merchant of Yonkers" which has just finished its run of two weekends in Palos Park proved to be something quite different than was expected. The satire and philosophy injected into it by its author Thornton Wilder kept the audiences' ears pricked up lest they lose one subtle word.

The soliloquizing of Gordon Gibbons Orvis Henkle, Jack and Mary Richard minded one of Shakespeare or O'Neill and were tendered much applause. The antics of Richard, Henkle and Don Jacobson as the employees of the penurious merchant, kept the audience in laughter most of the time. The cast was a notable one and was well directed by Judith Strohm Bond. The costumes, makeup and settings were in keeping with the early eighties.

At the end of the play Saturday night a large bouquet was presented to Bernice Ditchburne who although suffering from 5 broken ribs in an accident Friday, played her part in true trouper style.

As Mr. Fred Guendling was returning to his home in Mokena Tuesday evening on the train that arrived here at 6:45, he suffered quite severe injuries. When the train was in the district of 115th street, which is a negro district, some negro boys threw a rock at the train which came through the window where Mr. Guendling was seated. The rock hit him in the head and the broken glass from the window fell over his clothes. He started to bleed quite profusely.

Upon arriving at Mokena he was taken to the office of Dr. E. G. McMahon where he was given medical aid. He was cut on the nose, and face and his eye was bruised and hemorrhaged. There was the appearance of a brain concussion, and he has been confined to bed since.

Only a Slight Difference of Fifty-Three Years

Once in a great while Mother Nature permits herself a whimsical chuckle and turns in a performance that makes us gasp. The old lady gave such a performance on the day that George Thomas Morton was born in Sioux City, Iowa. He is called either "Ike" or "General," for little George looks as if he were a pea out of the same pod that gave us General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower. There is an interval of 53 years between the births of the two "Ikes." George Thomas will soon be two years old.

As raiders they saw action in Solomon campaigns, Emirau, Guam, Okinawa and finally landed on Japan proper with General MacArthur's surrender commission. They have the honor of firing some of the first and last shots.

ARMY CRACKDOWN

The army is determined that returned European war veterans shall no longer appeal to congressmen or newspaper men to hasten their discharge from the army or to protest redeployment to Japan for police duty.

Severe secret orders have just been issued to this effect over the signature of Brig. Gen. A. M. Gurney, chief of staff for Lt. Gen. Lloyd R. Fredendall, commander of the 2nd army. The order, which has been secretly circulated, reads:

"Recently members of a division in the United States scheduled for redeployment to the Pacific area appealed to the press and radio protesting against transfer of the division to the Pacific theater. . . . Action of this nature, if concerted, may subject participants to disciplinary action. . . .

"Incidents such as noted in paragraph 3 above (the paragraph just quoted)," continued the secret order, "will be dealt with drastically by this headquarters and the commander concerned will be summarily relieved."

The division referred to probably was the 95th, stationed at Camp Shelby, Miss., which sent all sorts of appeals to newspaper men and radio commentators against being transferred from Europe to Japan. Apparently the protests worked, for the order to send the 95th to Japan was rescinded.

PRESIDENTIAL POKER

Those who traveled with President Truman on his various trips to Washington state and Potsdam found him a delightful and entertaining companion. One story they tell about Truman's trip to the northwest was regarding his salmon fishing off the Washington coast.

While the motor boat was chugging back to shore, Truman and his old senatorial friends, Gov. Mon Wallgren and Sen. Warren Magnuson of Washington, played poker. The stakes were low, but the thrifty Truman was trying hard to come out ahead. It was agreed that, no matter who was ahead, the game would stop the minute the boat hit shore.

So the President kept up a line of banter to the Norwegian skipper.

"Slow her down, Christiansen," he said, "I'm behind. I need a little extra time to catch up."

Or again, it was: "Speed her up, Christiansen, I'm ahead now. Let's get to shore before the governor catches up."

Finally, the motor boat touched shore with the President of the United States a few cents ahead. Skipper Christiansen was just as pleased as Truman.

ARMY AND RAILROADS

Even the army's friends on Capitol hill say the brass hats are killing any chance for public support they might have had by their autocratic disregard for civilian needs in such fields as coal mining, steelmaking and railroad.

One of the busiest railroads in the country today is the Southern Pacific, which has handled most of the east-west traffic to the busy port of San Francisco. The S. P. is a single-track line able to carry its huge volume only by scheduling trains at 10-minute intervals round the clock. In order to maintain this schedule, it requires a huge crew of crack trainmen, repair men and other skilled workers. It has done pretty well even in the last year, although there was a recent bottleneck near El Paso which resulted in the holding up of 75 trains.

Southern Pacific officials have been begging the army to release skilled railroad men with the 80 points required for discharge, or to furlough railroad men in this country with less points.

Finally in mid-summer the army agreed to release 4,000 railroad men, with 2,400 of them assigned to the S. P. But then the army began going back on its promise and said it could discharge only 1,300 men. A few weeks ago, the army released 230 men to the Southern Pacific and said no more were available. The joker is that 24,000 men have gone into the armed forces from the S. P. employment roster.

Finally, War Mobilizer Snyder stepped in and forced the army to release 4,000 railroad men, amidst loud squawks from brass hats that this action would destroy morale.

CAPITAL CHAFF

Senators are looking forward to better eating, now that Derwin Darling has come back from two years in the marines to resume management of the senate restaurant.

Alleged United States opposition to the Kilgore unemployment compensation bill has cracked open. Forty-seven state administrations were reported opposed, but it now develops that Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Oklahoma, Washington and California are definitely for the bill, with Connecticut and several others about ready to support it.

THE ISRAELITES
IN A FOREIGN LAND

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 47:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations.—Psalm 90:1.

Preparation of a great nation takes time. God wanted Israel to have opportunity to develop from a family to a nation so He arranged for them to have a place of refuge and of abundant provision while they grew. He had already made ready for them by sending Joseph into Egypt, and now the whole family of Jacob moved down.

Jacob's fears had been overcome by the vision of God (Gen. 46:1-4), in which he was assured that this was the outworking of God's purpose to make of him a "great nation." The promises to him and his forefathers were now in process of fulfillment. The man who believes God is privileged to see Him work. We find the family of Jacob

I. In Egypt, but Separated (vv. 1-6).

As he presented the representatives of his brethren to Pharaoh, Joseph made known that he had settled them in the land of Goshen, a favored spot well suited to their life as shepherds.

It is worthy of observation that while they were now in Egypt there was no thought of mingling with the Egyptians. They were to be a separated people living in a strange land. Only thus could the purity of the nation be maintained and a people suited for God's service be kept and made ready.

The application to the life of the Christian lies right at hand. In Scripture Egypt is a type of the world, where fleshly appetites are satisfied and where strange gods are worshiped. The Christian is to "come out from among them" and to be separate (II Cor. 6:14-18).

The tendency in our time is to minimize the importance of separation from worldliness and to regard those who preach and practice it as being narrow and old-fashioned. Say what you will, it is a fact that worldliness has robbed the Church of its spiritual power and of its real testimony for Christ.

As a matter of fact, the Christian is not narrow. He is as broad as the counsels of God, and the worldling who boasts of his broad-mindedness has often mistaken superficial flatness for real broadness.

II. Blessed, but Blessing (vv. 7-10).

Jacob and his family received many mercies at the hands of Pharaoh and his people, but they were not in the land just to be blessed but also to bring a blessing.

The patriarch Jacob was brought by Joseph into the presence of Pharaoh. That noble son was not ashamed to bring his aged Hebrew father into the presence of the king. There he gave witness concerning his life. But he did something else—he blessed Pharaoh.

That scene speaks volumes to us as Christians. We are not of the world but we are in the world (John 17:15-17). We are to be a separated people for the glory of God, but that does not mean that we are not to bring blessing to those round about us. We are in the world not just to enjoy ourselves, but to make Christ known to others—to touch lives that are needy and saddened and sin-sick.

It is also of interest that the blessing of Jacob was given to the man on the throne. We are apt to think of the poor and the underprivileged as needing the gospel and forget that the rich man in the house on the hill may be the most spiritually hungry in town.

III. Preserved, but Preparing (vv. 11, 12).

God sent His chosen people down into Egypt that they might not perish in the famine. He wanted them kept and nourished while they grew into the great people which He ultimately led out toward the Promised Land.

That was important, for had they not been preserved the promise of God could not have been fulfilled. But all the time they were being prepared for the great day of deliverance and blessing which was to come.

Applying the truth once again to the Christian believer, it is not enough just to be safe in Christ. That is precious but it is not enough; there must be growth in grace.

Some Christians are saved and kept all right, but it is just a matter of being "preserved" and put on a shelf. They are of no earthly use unless it is to be exhibited, and that kind of a Christian is not really worth showing off.

Then, too, some of the saints are preserved but not in sweetness. They are evidently preserved by pickling, sour, unpleasant people sometimes called "vinegar saints." God deliver us from that kind of preservation! May we be kept in such a way that we are ready to witness for God!

Thunderhead

MARY O'HARA
W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: Thunderhead, the only white horse ever foaled on the Goose Bar ranch in Wyoming, is evidently a throwback to his great grand sire, a wild stallion called the Albino. His 14-year-old owner, Ken McLaughlin, hopes he will become a famous racer. Thunderhead, very fast but difficult to handle, is entered in a race meet in Idaho. On a trip into the mountains Thunderhead breaks away and joins a band of wild horses. He kills the leader, the Albino, and takes the herd for himself. Ken's father, Rob, tells Ken that Touch and Go, a filly, will be raced instead of Thunderhead. In a sudden cold snap both Banner and Thunderhead bring their herds to the stables.

CHAPTER XXV

"The two bands of mares and colts are all mixed up in both corrals—eating me out of house and home—eighty head of horses! Gus and I'll have to spend half the night sorting them out—putting them through the chute—Banner took some of Thunderhead's mares and put them with his—"

A look of consternation dawned on Nell's face. "He did! Why, Rob! Why, that might start a fight!"

"It might and it did!" Rob reached for bread.

"Oh, Rob! What did you do?" "We beat them apart. Just in time too—before they really went berserk. A little later and we couldn't have done it. One of them would be dead now."

Nell was stunned into silence. Rob ate hungrily, then added more quietly, "And it wouldn't be Thunderhead."

Nell said nothing to that. No. Certainly not the powerful young creature who had overcome such an antagonist as the Albino—No—it would have been Banner—

"Rob," she said quietly a little later, "do you think they're safe now?"

"I do not," Rob shoved back his chair, went over to the stove and stood with his back to it while he filled and lit his pipe.

He took a few puffs, drew the smoke into his lungs, felt the calming effect of it, and finally took his pipe out of his mouth and held it, his eyes fixed in a brown study on the floor and said, "Banner will never be safe again."

"But—but—" stammered Nell, "we can send Thunderhead away again—he'll go back to that valley with his mares—"

"And in every storm he'll bring them home," said Rob quietly. "He's done that all his life, he'll continue to do it."

And for a while there was nothing to be heard in the cosy kitchen but the whine of the wind around the chimneys, and a sudden furious onslaught rattling the windows.

Pauly crawled out from under the stove, stretched slowly and sensuously, curling up her coral tongue, then seated herself and began a leisurely and thorough bath.

"No," said Rob again with a sharp sigh, raising his eyes to the ceiling of the room and taking a few more puffs of his pipe, "Banner will never be safe—not till Thunderhead is dead—or gelded."

A sound burst from Nell. "But Rob—Ken!" And at that Rob went wild again.

"I'm thinking of Ken too!" he shouted. "Do you think I like to do this? Now, when the boy has done better, achieved more, made me prouder of him than I ever have been in my life? If there were any way to get rid of that stallion—get him hundreds of miles away from here—turn him over to someone else—But who would buy him or accept him as a gift? He's no use to anyone."

Rob knocked the ashes out of his pipe, slipped it in his pocket, stamped across the kitchen to the porch and started to get himself into his outdoor rig. Woolen trousers into overshoes. Canvas trousers over both, tied at the ankles. Sheepskin lined lumberjack, felt-lined gloves, and deep, padded Scotch winter cap. With his hand on the door knob he paused and looked back at Nell.

"I would be smart," he said slowly, "to put a bullet through him and haul him away. Ken would never know but what he was still up there in that valley."

Nell made no answer and waited for Rob to open the door and leave. But he did not leave. She looked up finally and saw that he was looking at her, waiting. There was a certain expression on his face. He was suffering. He was furious. He was stumped. He saw only one way out—he didn't want to hurt her, through Ken. He was asking her, and waiting for her answer.

Her heart gave a terrible leap, and she felt weak, and sat down at the table. He was serious about this, and he had put it up to her. She leaned her head on her hands.

Not to judge this like a sentimental woman—to judge it fairly like a judge. No, like someone who has the real responsibility and whose duty it is to find the safest way out for everybody. She could see the years stretch ahead, the constant annoyance and expense to Rob of having these wild mares and their colts brought down for feed and shelter in storms. At last they would feel that the ranch belonged to them. Thunderhead was oriented to this place, there was no way to prevent his coming, except by a sustained program of discouragement and unkindness that

Rob would not be capable of, to say nothing of Ken. And lastly, the worst thing of all, it was only a matter of time before Thunderhead would kill Banner.

Nell went to bed and sat reading, but she didn't know what the words meant, for she was listening for a shot. At last she fell asleep, and Rob came in and undressed and put out the lights without waking her.

But there had been no shot, for Rob had thought of another way—just a chance of a way—a very slim chance.

In the morning the storm was still raging. Rob rose early, saddled Shorty and rode over to the telegraph station to discover the state of the weather and roads westward. It was worst right here on Sherman Hill but snow ploughs were keeping the highways open and busses were running. Fifty miles to the west no snow was falling.

He rode back and explained his idea to Nell. If he could take Thunderhead in the trailer to Saginaw Falls—if he could make the trip in two days, they would arrive on October twenty-third, the day before the Greenway race. There was still time. And if Thunderhead should give a good account of himself in the race, someone would buy him and take him far away and everybody would be happy. After all, this was what he had been trained for.

"But the storm, Rob! And the roads! And those awful passes! Taking a horse down the Divide in a trailer in such weather as this!"

"And—" prompted Ken, raising his eyes.

"Fifty miles west it's clear weather," said Rob, as he threw things into his suitcase. "And, Nell—the kid deserves it. The hardest part will be getting out to the highway over the ranch road. It's up to my waist in drifts."

Gus had orders to take Shorty and spend all day, if necessary, driving those wild mares and their colts off the ranch. They would hang around for a while, but with Thunderhead gone, they would be at loose ends, and once off the ranch they would go straight back to their valley and stay there.

Thunderhead was blanketed and put in the trailer, his head tied low so that he would be helpless in case he wanted to make a bolt for freedom.

Big Joe and Tommy were hitched to the home-made snow plough, and Gus, bundled up like an Eskimo, with only a slit of storm-reddened face visible between cap and collar, forced the horses through the drifts. The car and trailer followed close behind.

Ken was not alone with his horse long. Perry Gunston and Tommy Pratt came to look him over and give him his morning oats, and presently others of the stablemen and trainers who had heard of the stallion gathered around. Thunderhead would not touch his oats. He nosed them, then turned his head away, standing inert and indifferent.

Gunston was disturbed. "Off his feed?" he said, looking questioningly at Ken.

Ken took some oats in his hand and held them cupped under Thunderhead's soft black muzzle. Thunderhead played with the grains, nuzzled Ken's hand, blew some of them away, then in a weary sort of manner, swung his head aside and stood quietly—waiting.

The boys began to chatter. It's the trip upset him. When Dusky Maid was brought from Denver, she was off her feed for a week. He might be coming down with shipping fever. To Ken, "You won't enter him, will you? If he's off his feed like this?"

"It doesn't mean he's out of condition," said Ken scornfully. "He's never out of condition. He can run faster than any other horse any time he wants to."

Gunston suggested that Ken should give the horse a run. He might be willings to eat after he'd had a bit of exercise. Dickson came running up, anxious to inspect the racer he was to ride that afternoon.

"Maybe Dickson had better ride him," suggested Ken to Gunston, "so he can get used to him."

But Gunston decided that Ken had better take him out for his first run. They saddled the horse and Ken mounted him and moved slowly off toward the track, Dickson close beside Ken, and Gunston and Pratt following.

The jockey was firing questions at Ken. Ken answered quietly. No, he doesn't mind the whip. Sometimes you got to beat hell out of him. . . . No, he's not hard-mouthed. You can guide him without any rein at all. He knows where you want to go. . . . Sure, he's got a chance to win the purse. . . . he can win it, if he wants to, there just isn't any doubt about it. He can run faster than any other horse, I tell you. It's just if he wants to. . . . Well—if he takes a notion. . . . if he's in a bad temper. . . . if he's got anything else on his mind—"

As he said the last words, Ken looked uneasily off at the horizon. Dickson looked anxiously at the horse.

Ken added, "Sometimes he starts bad. Don't worry about that. He might start with a rough, hard gallop. That's not his real running gait. Just beat hell out of him. Fight him. Make him mind you. He can catch up with anything once he hits his gait."

When Ken moved out to the track, there was a small crowd strung along the rail, several of them holding stop watches in their hands.

But this was not one of the times when Thunderhead "started bad." The familiarity of the light figure on his back, the well-loved voice, and those feather hands—Thunderhead went from an easy canter without a hitch into his extraordinary floating run, and Perry Gunston's narrow, tense eyes narrowed still more. He glanced at the watch in his hand, looked at Dickson, shook his head, and put the watch away.

Dickson exploded, "Ker-r-rist! You don't see a horse run like that! You just dream about it!"

"Gosh Awmighty!" exclaimed one of the others, "he's got the Greenway purse in his pocket!"

"Looks like Ken's sold his horse," said Gunston.

It was not until Ken sat down for breakfast with his father in the grill room of the Club House that he learned all the details of Thunderhead's return. It seemed to him more dreadful even than he had thought. The stallion had not just come home alone, as he often had before, he had returned with the entire band of mares and colts—his most cherished possessions—and had trustfully put them in the keeping of the Goose Bar corrals. And now, if his own plans went through, and his father's plans, Thunderhead would never see his mares again.

With head down and eyes on his plate, Ken fiddled with his fried eggs.

"Where do you think they all went—the mares and colts?" he asked after a moment.

"Back to their valley," said Rob. "That's their home. They would drift back there—and—" he broke off.

"And—" prompted Ken, raising his eyes.

"I was going to say," said Rob, "wait for Thunderhead. They'd be expecting him to come back, of course, and take care of them. Why aren't you eating your breakfast?"

Ken ceased all pretence, laid his fork down and leaned back. It was rather a garbled speech that poured out—about Thunderhead's new affection for him. His trust. And the way he was so terribly lonely for his mares and his valley, and right now when, for the first time, the horse had accepted him and turned toward him as if he was a friend—right now, Ken was playing the part of an enemy to him—not a friend at all.

Rob listened with an impassive face, eating his hearty breakfast with zest, buttering his toast, filling his cup with more hot coffee, glancing around the room, his head cocked as if he was hearing all that was going on as well as the words that came hesitatingly from Ken.

He flashed one lightning glance at his boy. He saw the shadowed eyes, and the pallor and the thin drawn lips that had become familiar signs of Ken's heartache.

Finally he said sharply, "You've been moving heaven and earth for three years to make a racer out of this horse and now you're changing your mind. Can't you stay put? Why in hell do you have to wobble about like that?"

Ken thought that if his father could only see the pictures that moved slowly behind each other in his own mind, he wouldn't ask such things. Right now Ken was seeing the picture of the way Thunderhead had—so trustingly—laid his head against him and placed his whole misery and longing in Ken's hands to straighten out for him.

Ken spoke hesitatingly. "I guess it's just—what you always say yourself, dad—what we do to horses when we make them do what we want, instead of what they were naturally meant to do."

Veterans' SERVICE BUREAU

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper, through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

Veterans Bill of Rights

It is virtually certain that this session of the congress will liberalize many provisions of the G.I. Bill of Rights, particularly since President Truman and the Veterans administration have now given added impetus to needed clarification and liberalization.

In his message to the congress, the President urged that prompt consideration be given for more liberal hospitalization and veterans care, more vocational training under the vocational rehabilitation act and to education and training under the serviceman's readjustment act (G.I. bill). The President further urged more specific language for re-employment of veterans under the selective service act, so there can be no doubt about the right of a veteran to get back his old job should he desire it.

The Veterans administration itself will take the lead and spearhead the fight for these clarifying and liberalizing amendments and the administration will have the backing of such organizations as the American Bar association, the American Institute of Banking, the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

At this time 22,349 veterans, out of more than two million demobilized thus far, are taking advantage of the education features of the bill of rights. Some of the proposed amendments would include "adequate subsistence and travel allowances for veterans taking intensive refresher courses away from home; permit instruction by correspondence, particularly from approved educational institutions which have not hitherto conducted correspondence courses."

Questions and Answers

Q.—My husband was given an honorable medical discharge March 9, 1943. At that time they did not receive a discharge button. Where can he obtain one? Mrs. R. R., Marshalltown, Iowa.

A.—At any army separation center, probably at your local draft board, or one may be purchased at almost any army store.

Q.—Has an army officer the right to cut off the allotment to his wife and child without any reason? Has he no obligation to meet concerning his family? Wife, Stillacoom, Wash.

A.—Yes, he has the right to discontinue his allotment. He has the same obligations concerning his family as any other honorable husband.

Q.—I am making an application for a one-ton truck. I have a farm of 200 acres and need a truck very much. I am an honorably discharged soldier, with two years service. I would like to get a government-owned truck if possible. J. F., Schemmady, N. Y.

A.—If you are referring to a surplus war property truck, would suggest that you contact your local AAA county committee or your county agent for information where these surplus trucks are available from a bona fide dealer in your community. You are entitled to an A-1 priority without red tape if there are surplus war trucks for sale at any of your local dealers.

Q.—I want to know if a man that has been in the navy 16 months, is 26 years old and has a wife and two children, will get a discharge soon? Wife, Vida, Okla.

A.—Not necessarily. The navy man will be subject to the discharge system of rating adopted by the navy.

Q.—I am a World War I veteran and have a job. Will I have to give up my job for a veteran of World War II? Does a veteran of World War I have as much right as a World War II veteran? W. L., Mora, Minn.

A.—If you are holding a job now which was given up by a veteran of this war, then the honorably discharged veteran of World War II has a right to that job back under the provisions of the selective service act. A veteran of World War I has all the rights of a citizen of the U. S. A. and as much right as a veteran of this war except for the express benefits enacted for veterans of World War II.

Q.—A serviceman owed his father some money before he entered the service. Then the father became suddenly ill and was unable to work. The serviceman then provided the father a family allowance from the government. Should the serviceman get credit on what he owed his father for the amount the government sent? Reader, Hayden, Colo.

A.—That question obviously is a matter for private settlement between the serviceman and his father.

What One Language Do All Speak?

YOU KNOW the answer to that one. They all speak the silent language of earth and weather—of crops and stock—of planting time and harvest. For they are farmers—blood brothers the world over.

Today, many of the farmers of other lands aren't doing so well. Their lands have been mined, fought over, ravaged. Their stock has been butchered. Their farm buildings burned. They have no seed to plant the soil.

They desperately need your help.

And you can give your help—through the dollars you give to your Community War Fund.

Those dollars you wring from the soil, and give to a great and worthy cause, help more than the farmers of other lands. They help farmers' sons—and other men's sons—endure the tedium of prison camps. They help provide the blessing of entertainment to service people throughout the world. And they help solve war problems right here in your own community.

The dollars you give to your Community War Fund go farther than any dollars you're apt to put anywhere else. And this year—they need to go farther than ever before. So give again—and generously—won't you?

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
The subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, September 23, was:

"MATTER"
The Golden Text was:
"I have declared, and have saved, and I have shewed, when there was no strange god among you: therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God" (Isa. 43: 12).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible:

"And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumblingblock of their iniquity before their face: should I be enquired of at all by them? Therefore speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumblingblock of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet: I the Lord will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his idols" (Ezek. 14: 2-4).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:

"The human mind has been an idolater from the beginning, having other gods and believing in more than the one Mind. . . . A correct view of Christian Science and of its adaptation to healing includes vastly more than is at first seen. Works on metaphysics leave the grand point untouched. They never crown the power of Mind as the Messiah, nor do they carry the day against physical enemies,—even to the extinction of all belief in matter, evil, disease, and death,—nor insist upon the fact that God is all, therefore that matter is nothing beyond an image in mortal mind" (pp. 186, 116).

JAMS CAN BE EASY ON SUGAR!

Beautiful but dumb—that's strawberries! Take away their glorious coloring and what have you? Nothing much but dull, uninteresting lumps, incapable of self support!

Strawberries demand sugar just as if it were not rationed and insist upon most of it being granulated. When going into jams or preserves, they will tolerate the substitution of corn sirup or corn sugar for about one-third of the regular sugar called for in the recipe.

These pampered pets of the garden can't stand up and jell without the aid of sugar and pectin. Some of them need lemon juice too. They will not behave right when canned, unless granted more sugar than any other berry wants; then after they get it, they must be petted along or they fade, flatten, and float.

According to Gladys Kimbrough, Home Service Director for Ball Brothers Company, glass jar company with headquarters at Muncie, Indiana, "Tart strawberries with small core and deep red color throughout are less popular with the general public than the sweet, feather-weight ones, but are far the better for canning and preserving."

Miss Kimbrough advises home canners to forget about preserves for the duration or until sugar is more plentiful and make up a considerable amount of jam. Jams are easy on sugar. A good one can be made by using one-half pound sugar and one-third pound of corn sirup to each pound of capped berries. Jams need to be cooked a little longer when corn sirup is used. They should be cooked in small batches and stirred often.

Berries Without Sugar

When one runs out of sugar, berries (any kind) may be cleaned, crushed and stewed in their own juice until thick, then canned by processing 10 minutes in a hot-water bath canner. Strawberries, prepared in this manner have an ugly color but will brighten up to some extent later on when sugar is added and the mixture boiled down to Victory jam thickness—meaning not quite so thick as usual. Two cups of sugar are needed for making one quart of crushed berries into jam. Here is a helpful hint. A spoon or two of juice from those beets you canned won't change the flavor but will help the color of jam made from canned strawberries.

Blueberries, huckleberries, blackberries, dewberries, elderberries and many others are far more useful than strawberries and can be beautifully without one speck of sugar. Most of them can best when heated slowly until the juice runs free before they are turned into jars for processing, but blueberries, especially if they are to be used in muffins and the like, are nicer when canned by a recipe we found in the Ball Blue Book.

Place two or three quarts clean blueberries in a square of cheesecloth. Hold the cloth by the corners and dip into boiling water until spots appear. Then dip quickly in and out of cold water. Pack into hot jars. (Add neither sugar nor liquid.) Process 20 minutes in hot-water bath.

Wild blackberries have always been a favorite with home canners but the equally useful elderberry is likely to be left to the birds. That when elderberry pie is so wonderful! Good cooks usually touch it up with a spoonful of lemon juice or vinegar.

We like elderberries and most others best when canned with some sugar, but sugar shortages certainly won't stop us if we can beat the birds to the berries.

LUXURY FOODS EASILY CANNED AT HOME

As long as there is a war and for some time thereafter, luxury items in the food line will be scarce, costly or nonexistent. Commonplace items become luxuries when a nation suffers shortages of labor, machinery, trucks, and trains for producing and delivering nonessential material for civilian use.

But, we have the word of Gladys Kimbrough, editor of the famous Ball Blue Book of canning recipes, that no home pantry need be shy of a variety of luxury items, many of which are easily canned at home!

We agree with Miss Kimbrough when she says, "It is a shameful and unnecessary disappointment when one cannot find mushrooms for the sauce after saving up enough points for a steak." Of course, there is no point in being caught short on mushrooms, but remember you won't have any use for the steak if you go out and collect any and everything which might be a mushroom. Some of those toadstools are poisonous.

Home canned eggplant is delicious when seasoned with onion, pepper, butter and perhaps a dash of tomato sauce, the mixture blended with egg and bread crumbs and baked. Some of the crumbs should come out on top where they will brown nicely.

Miss Kimbrough does the eggplant dish and a similar one with home canned summer squash by rule of thumb. However, the recipe she gave us to put at the end of this story is very, very exact because home canning is not rule-of-thumb business.

Those of you who like them and live near where they grow might as well have all the artichokes you want. Canning them is no trick at all when you have a good recipe and follow it.

Cranberries were reasonably plentiful in the market the week before last Thanksgiving Day—but did you try to find them a month later? Well, maybe this year you will remember that home canned cranberry sauce is just about the easiest of anything to can. What's more, it has a wonderful flavor and goes as well with chicken in May as with turkey in December.

Make Red Pepper Jam

Yes, we know this isn't cranberry season, but you need not wait that long if you have a yen for something tart, sweet and red to add a touch of glamour to an otherwise drab meal. That something is Red Pepper Jam. When you make it, be sure to use meaty red sweet peppers. Those with thin walls and bitter flavor will not serve the purpose.

Whether the item you plan to can is necessity or luxury, please, for your own sake, pay careful attention to the selection and use of jars. It is false economy to use anything but regular home canning jars. Most of those used by commercial packers are very thin and intended to be discarded when emptied. They must be light weight in order to keep down shipping cost. Compare the weight of a salad dressing jar with a milk bottle and you will see what we mean. A regular home canning jar doesn't need to be as heavy as a milk bottle because it does not receive such hard use but it must be heavy enough to stand up under home canning conditions.

It is smart to follow the manufacturer's instructions when using jars and caps. We mean the instructions packed with the jars and printed on the cap cartons—not those you have had five or ten years! Failure to heed this bit of advice explains why the old-time canner may fail and the beginner succeed when using war-time jars, caps and rubbers. But whether you are an old-timer or a newcomer, we believe you will like this recipe for canning eggplant, offered through courtesy of the copyright owner, Ball Brothers Company, Muncie, Indiana.

Use fresh, firm, tender eggplant. Wash eggplant clean, then peel, slice or cube. Soak 45 minutes in brine (1 tablespoon salt to 1 quart water). Drain. Boil 5 minutes in clear water. Pack into hot jars. Cover with boiling water. Process 50 minutes at 10 pounds pressure.

or two of canned vegetables or fruits. An empty jar will be replaced by the filled ones and can be had at the Methodist church. If you have not as yet made your contribution, bring your jars to the church this week.

Saturday evening Mrs. Thos. Cooper, Mrs. Katherine Brandau and Mrs. Fred Ricketts attended a Bridal shower on Miss Helen Gulinski in Chicago, who will become the bride of Edwin Brandau Wednesday evening. Edwin Brandau is a nephew of Mrs. Cooper. The bride to be received many lovely gifts. Delicious refreshments were served.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Cooper and family attended the wedding reception of Miss Helen Gulinski and Edwin Brandau who were married Wednesday evening in Chicago. The newlyweds plan to make their home in Joliet.

Miss Rose Enders is home and back on the job after spending 2 weeks with her sister, Mrs. Howard Hullett in Midlothian, who was ill.

WHO is the greatest hitter that baseball ever knew? It seemed to us that the best way to round out this argument was to go in a direct line to one who was a master at applying the ash.

Ty Cobb

So I looked up Ty Cobb, author and producer of more than 4,000 base hits. No, Ty didn't name Cobb. He named Shoeless Joe Jackson.

"I'll tell you why Jackson belongs on top," Cobb said. "Back in those years we not only had to swing at a dead ball but also a ball that was doctored in every known way. We had the spit ball, the emery ball, the fuzzed-up ball—a ball that would do a lot of queer things and come at you with odd dips and breaks. So the good hitters of that period had to choke the bat and go in for punch hitting.

"All except Jackson. Joe still took his full swing and he was often up there from .380 to .410. I know I could never have hit above .300 with that type of swing. Only Jackson, old Shoeless Joe, had the eye and the smoothness and the timing to do that.

"I used to wonder why he didn't strike out at least twice a game, taking a full cut at a ball that flopped and ducked from the treatment it got, either by emery or thumbnail or saliva.

"Taking nothing away from Babe Ruth, the Babe never had to swing at a slippery or fuzzed-up ball. In those days you could lead the league with 10 or 12 home runs. The trick stuff had ended before Babe moved to the outfield in 1919.

"I've often wondered what Joe Jackson would have hit against the pitching and the livelier ball that came in around 1920. The same might go for Nap Lajoie, another great natural hitter, who didn't have as deep or as full a lash as Jackson used. With the livelier ball Jackson and Lajoie would have had infielders playing back in the outfield to keep out of hospitals. In one of the old-timer's games played in Boston with the lively ball, Lajoie's line drive hit the center field fence, and that was after Lajoie was through."

About Hitting

I asked Ty if he was ever tempted to become a slugger.

"Not with that dead, fuzzed-up ball," he said. "I always believed in playing percentage, and the percentage was all against a free swinger in those days.

"Later on I tried a few times to go out for distance, but by that time I had been around nearly 20 years and it was a little late in life to change my swing or learn new tricks. You can't change the habits of 20 years in anything like a hurry, if you can change them at all. But I remember a series in St. Louis where I decided to take a chance on the slugging side and as I recall it, I picked up five home runs in two games.

"Walter Johnson was the greatest pitcher I ever faced," Ty went on, "except Ed Walsh in 1908 when he won 40 ball games and saved 10 or 12 others. But when you speak of great pitchers, how can anyone overlook Cy Young?"

"Cy had been pitching 15 years before I came to the Tigers, but he was still a great pitcher. He won something like 510 ball games, which is more than most pitchers ever worked in. Cy was a big, burly fellow and he could hide that ball better than anyone I ever saw. He would turn his back to you in the windup and the ball would be on you before you knew what was happening. Cy had fine speed, a good curve ball and perfect control. He could pitch into a tin cup. He was also smart and game.

"The great thing about Walter Johnson was that you knew a fast ball was coming—but it didn't help. You never had to worry about a curve in those days from Walter, or any change of pace. Just speed. Raw speed, blinding speed, too much speed. The answer is that Johnson still holds the shut-out and the strike-out record. With a better hitting, better scoring ball club, Johnson would have had several 40 game seasons on the winning side. Some day look up the records and see how many 1 to 0 games he lost. I can see that long, rubber right arm unwinding now, with the ball on top of you before you could even blink. No wonder a lot of ball players used to get sick on the day Johnson was to pitch."

'Crazy' Stunts

I asked Ty what was the greatest thrill he got out of baseball.

"On the bases," he said. "I liked to run and at times try out a few crazy things, such as scoring from first on a single or scoring from second on an outfield fly.

"Every now and then I'd take a crazy chance where I actually had no chance at all. I knew that. But I also knew that a certain amount of crazy running would put more pressure on the defense and maybe start a little hurrying.

Better Soil Grows Healthier Livestock

Cattle Prefer Hay From Fertilized Soil

Cattle have sense enough to show farmers whether their pasture land is properly fertilized or not, according to a statement by the Middle West Soil Improvement committee.

"That was demonstrated by a recent experiment reported by Dr. William A. Albrecht, head of the Fertilized hay that pays.

Soils department of the University of Missouri," says the statement.

"The cattle were turned loose in a field in which there were two stacks of hay. The grasses were the same species; the curing was the same. The hay looked and smelled the same. But the cattle ate the stack from the treated area first and ignored the other until later.

"The hay from the stacks was analyzed in a laboratory. Then it was discovered that that stack contained much more calcium and phosphorus—two minerals cattle must have for good health. The good hay came from soil that had been treated with lime and fertilizer. The poor hay came from untreated land.

"This experiment proved once again that better soil grows better food, better livestock and healthier human beings.

"This soil's capacity to produce meat, grain, vegetables and dairy products high in essential minerals and vitamins is dependent on that soil's supply of nitrogen, phosphorus and potash. This capacity can be increased by intelligent soil management including the regular application of mixed fertilizer containing these necessary elements. The fertilizer industry which has demonstrated its ability to provide plant food for winning the wartime food production battle will be fully equipped to help farmers meet all their postwar requirements for soil improvement."

DDT Outdone

An insecticide even deadlier than DDT has been discovered by the Imperial Chemical industries in England. Its chemical designation is gamma isomer of benzene hexachloride, and it is known as gamexane.

The new insect slayer has qualities in common with DDT. It is a solid white substance and almost insoluble in water. It decomposed in the presence of lime, but can be sprayed in a kerosene solution or a water emulsion, or used as a dust, if lime is absent. It is not yet available for use in the United States. It is said to be unharmed to human users.

Poultry Debeaker

Following experiments at the University of California, an electric debeaker for poultry has been placed on the market by the Lyon Rural Electric company, San Diego, Calif. It eliminates picking and cannibalism, reduces feed loss and birds' nervousness and increases the quality of birds in general.

Enriched Tomatoes

Tomatoes with 10 times as much vitamin A value as is contained in varieties now offered on the market may be developed, according to Dr. F. P. Zscheile of the University of Chicago.

While rapid strides have been made in the development of varieties, Dr. Zscheile looks for considerable improvement in the post-war era, to such a point that tomatoes may be graded upon their vitamin content.

Trick for Trixie

By ETHELYN PARKINSON
McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

THE moment Anne Warner and I entered our apartment we knew something was wrong. Trixie, Anne's cute little cousin, had "been and gone."

"What do you suppose she's absconded with, this time?" I demanded. "Your hat, or my new dress?"

"Both, probably," Anne said grimly.

We hurried to look. "My dress is gone!" I cried.

"My hat's here, but—oh, my gloves and purse!" wailed Anne.

We had heavy dates, and the evening was half ruined. We faced each other gravely. "Anne," I said, "I'm sorry. But you remember I didn't want to take Trixie in. Now I guess it's her move, or mine."

Anne's eyes filled. "Peggy, I can't ask Trixie to go. Her mother would go crying to mine, and there'd be a big Warner family row."

"But we can't go on like this."

"I know. I'll find a way to make Trixie leave us. Just give me a little more time."

We were home before Trixie arrived. She came in gay as a bird. "Hi, gals! How do you like my outfit?" She pirouetted about the floor in my dress, swinging Anne's bag and gloves. "Did I ever get compliments on this dress! Hal thought it was simply super!"

"Hal!" Anne and I exclaimed together.

"Why, sure. Hal Ormsby."

Hal was a boy friend of Anne's—at least he'd tried to be. Anne didn't like him very much. No one did. He was rich and sissy and spoiled and, besides, Anne was interested elsewhere. But the point was that Trixie Warner had begun beau-snitching!

She pouted prettily. "You're not jealous, are you, Anne?"

Anne amazed me by looking stern. "Well, after all, he's my friend."

"But he'd never really seen me, until tonight. He came up to ask you for a date and we got talking, and he just forgot. I'm sorry you're angry," Trixie smiled. But she wasn't sorry.

I decided to keep out of it. But I certainly couldn't see that Anne was solving our problem. For a month Trixie had a wonderful time. She borrowed our prettiest things for her dates, and all we heard was "Hal, Hal, Hal!"

One day Anne asked sweetly, "But has he taken you to meet his mother?"

"Why, no. Why should he—yet?"

A week later Trixie told us triumphantly, "I'm invited to meet Hal's mother Sunday afternoon."

Anne smiled sweetly. "Well, try to impress her, or that will be the end for you and Hal, darling."

Trixie went shopping Saturday afternoon. But all her purchases were eclipsed when Anne came home with the hat. It was made of feather flowers in shades that no one, Trixie least of all, could resist. Anne made a great fuss over it. I'd never seen her so enthusiastic. "I'm wearing it to dinner tomorrow evening," she said. "It's an original. In fact, it was made to order."

"Aren't you wearing the new hat?" I asked Anne, Sunday afternoon.

"Oh, no. Not until tonight."

Outside the apartment I said, "Anne, if you really care so much for that hat you know Trixie will surely wear it."

Anne looked at me innocently. "Now, Peggy, Trixie knows I'm counting on it."

I went to a show and dinner. I got home at nine, and Anne was there. "Well," I asked her, "who wore the hat?"

"Trixie did."

I blew up. "Anne, you haven't done a thing about her! I'm as disgusted with you as I am with her!"

"Sh!" Anne whispered. "She's coming."

Trixie was in a fury. "Did you ever meet her?" she demanded of Anne.

"Hal's mother? Sure," Anne said. Trixie's eyes glittered. "I'll bet she didn't like you. I could see her stiffen the minute she heard the name Warner!"

"Did that make any difference to Hal?"

"Did it! If you'd seen him hustle me out! He broke our date for tomorrow and didn't hear me when I said I'd be free Tuesday."

She flounced into the bedroom and began hauling out her luggage, emptying drawers—packing!

Anne watched anxiously. "Trixie, are you going somewhere?"

"You bet! I'm getting out of this town, where I can meet men you haven't met first!" She was off.

"Anne—your hat!" I gasped.

"Call her back."

Anne laughed. "Oh, let her keep it."

"But it's an original. Made to order—"

"For Hal's mother, last year," Anne giggled. "I bought it at a rummage sale for twenty-five cents!"

Notes of a New Yorker:

Don't be disappointed that Halsey didn't ride Hirohito's horse. . . . That was just the colorful Old Boy's way of saying he'd get to Tokyo. . . . Admiral Halsey always was good with the phrase-turner's tool. . . . As frixample: The congratulatory message he sent to a submarine crew after a job well done:

"Your picture is on my piano."

The Boner Delightful (from an Aug. 24th a. m. paper): "De Gaulle Here. At City Hall, deception ceremonies will begin at noon."

Final Guffaw Dep't: The foot a newsmag once used to kick this columnist is now in its mouth. We were booted because one of our predictions fizzled. . . . The Aug. 13th (1945) issue of the same critic contained this gem: "Last week Russia was not ready—if ever she would be—to go to war with Japan." . . . Russia went to war with Nippon on Aug. 8th. To make the revenge sweeter—this broadcaster was first to accurately forecast Russia's positive entry into the war.

The House Ways and Means Committee has been giving a frosty reception to Pres. Truman's request for greater jobless benefits, with Rep. Knutson of Minnesota asking: "If we pay a man $25 a week for not working, what will we have to pay to get him to work?"

"The answer to that," commented a politico, "is that you'll have to pay him a living wage, that's all."

"Yes," agreed a colleague, "but what constitutes a living wage?"

"That," was the retort wonderful, "depends on whether you're giving it or getting it."

Sallies in Our Alley: In the Cub Room Fanny Ward, the 76-year old doll-face, swapped howdoodos with her friend, Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy. . . . "Frank," she asked, "how do you keep so young?" . . . Looking at his charming companion alongside him, Mr. Justice replied: "Courtin'." . . . In "Polonaise," the new Chopin-inspired operetta, the principals are all European-born. . . . Kiepara is a Pole; his wife, Marta Eggerth, is Hungarian or Austrian. . . . Kurt Bois, the new comedian, is from mittel-Europa, and other foreigners include David Lichine, the ballet master, and Tanya. . . . "Who's the most important person in the show?" inquired a clown. "The interpreter?"

The nationalist group has adopted another rodent for a pet: Traitor Petain. . . . The boo-hooey consists of sobbing about Petain's age and blubbering that he was merely trying to save France. Nutz! When Petain was in Vermyn's hip-pocket he was an accessory to Nazi crimes committed against Frenchmen of all ages including children. Petain sent 35,000 French children to work in Germany as slave laborers!

When the six Americans were arrested on State Dep't orders recently front pages whooped about the espionage angle. . . . This reporter pointed out that the spy hoopla was merely the gimmick used by some diplomats in an attempt to muzzle journalistic criticism of State Dep't policies. . . . A few days ago a Federal Grand Jury refused to indict three of the accused, and the other three were not indicted for espionage but merely for "purloining" government documents. . . . It is about time Congress probed the striped-britches boys responsible for the whole shameful affair.

The American Navy and Hirohito's eyeglasses prove the same thing. That the Japs are a very shortsighted people. . . . The Japs signed the surrender terms. But our safety is in our fleet, not in their signatures. . . . We had their signatures on treaties December 7th, 1941. . . . The Jap is anxious to let bygones be bygones. So is any criminal on the day of his conviction.

Sounds in the Night: At the Enduro: "A waiter is a guy who believes that money grows on trays." . . . At the Metropole: "When is that tramp going to write her naughty—biography?" . . . At Chateaubriand: "He made her an honest woman. Sent her back to her husband."

Stork Club Confucius: Beware of a Jap on his knees. It only makes it easier for him to hit you below the belt.

Very Important People Dep't: Arch Oboler is one of those studied kerrickters, according to intimates. . . . More than before, they add, he keeps referring to himself in the third person. . . . "Oboler doesn't want to do it" or "Oboler didn't sleep so good last night" or "Oboler is getting hungry," etc. . . . Mr. O. wrote and directed a Metro film once and in conference he said: "I don't think Oboler will like that at all!" . . . "Really?" was the icy retort of a departing supervisor. "I'll tell him when he comes in!"

RUBBER

Now it can be told: Workers proudly tell of their sabotage work when rubber plants in France were under Nazi control. They spread soapstone on the plies as they built a tire. Finished product looked perfect, but in use plies would break, leaving the Nazis flat.

"Rubber made in the U. S. A." has been developed to such a high degree that the war-born synthetic rubber industry will probably continue long after the war.

As of December 31, 1944, the average age of all passenger cars on the road was seven years.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Stewart and family returned Friday evening from a ten day visit with the former's parents at Kent, New York. They report an uneventful trip and enjoyed the vacation very much. In going they followed a northern route thru Detroit and part of Canada while in returning they came more southerly and passed thru Ohio.

Mr. Stewart's sister, Mrs. Beatrice Shapland, returned with them and will spend a few days at the Stewart home before seeking employment in Chicago where she intends to make her home.

A family reunion of the Doctor family was celebrated Sunday at the school house. It was a good old fashioned get together, and after a delicious dinner the afternoon was spent talking over old times. Mr. and Mrs. Francis Doctor had arrived Friday morning from Stuttgart, Ark., and are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sayers, but were unable to attend the reunion because of Mr. Doctor's illness. Incidentally this was a reunion in itself inasmuch as Mrs. Sayers had not seen her brother in 43 years. The oldest member present was Mr. Chas. Doctor and the youngest, his great grandson little Jimmy Uthe.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Pastor of Chicago visited the Roth family Friday evening.

Dinner guests of Mrs. Ellen Johnson Sunday were: Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Estrom of Round Lake, and Mr. and Mrs. Ole Anderson of Roseland.

furlough with his wife Gladys and daughter Jackie.

Mrs. Emma Erickson and Mrs. Gladys Herne of Cal., arrived Thursday at the home of Mrs. Ellen Johnson. Severe colds suffered by Mrs. Gladys Fordonski and daughter Jackie were the reason for the postponement of the fishing trip planned by Leo Putz and his wife Lillian and Sgt. Thos. Fordonski last week.

A Flower and Vegetable exhibit was sponsored by the school children of Dist. 137 last Friday afternoon, to which all the mothers were invited. Each child brought some outstanding specimen of a flower or vegetable from home, and prizes were awarded for the best. All the decorations, prizes etc. were prepared by the children. After the party, which was attended by Mrs. Howard Olsen, Mrs. Madge Goepner, Mrs. Winnifred McKean, Mrs. May Sayers and Mrs. Robt. Roth the children served tea and cookies. A great deal of preparation and pride on the children's part goes into the making of these occasional school parties, and it is unfortunate that more mothers do not attend. In consideration of both the teachers and the children's efforts let's make the next such event 100 percent attended.

The first regular meeting of Dist. 137 PTA was held in the school basement last Tuesday evening with the new president Mrs. Robt. Roth, presiding. At this meeting it was decided to form a Home Makers group for which purpose a special meeting was called to meet at the home of Mrs. Marion Colangelo, Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 pm. 15 Colleges and Schools, Special Services, Free Counselling All Available.

War veterans, both men and women and from all services, have many opportunities at the University of Illinois. All of the University's regular educational facilities of its 15 colleges and schools and extension division, as well as the services of the Division for War Veterans are available to them.

From the University's Personnel Bureau, any veteran, whether or not he is considering college, can receive free vocational and educational aptitude tests and counselling service. The bureau also is giving free counselling to veterans on problems of psychological adjustment.

The University's Division of Special Services for War Veterans is the central agency to study the needs of ex-service men and women, to inform and advise them, adjust courses of study to meet particular needs, and when educational needs are not met by existing curricula, to arrange special courses of study leading to degrees. Heading the division is Prof. Sidney E. Glenn, veteran of World War I.

This division has prepared a comprehensive "Manual for War Veterans" to answer the questions of veterans about government educational benefits, opportunities and services at the University, the courses of study related to many fields of work, and answering the question of "Why go to college?" A copy of this free booklet will be sent on request.

Anyone who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in World War I or between Sept. 16, 1940, and the termination of World War II, who was an Illinois resident or was a student in the University when entering the service, and who has been honorably discharged is eligible to a four-year free-tuition scholarship provided under state law. Federal government educational benefits for ex-service men and women have been set up by the "G. I. Bill of Rights," and by legislation for disabled veterans.

The University will enroll veterans who cannot meet ordinary college entrance requirements, but who by examinations, tests, or otherwise demonstrate their capability to do University work. Credit for training in the services or in colleges other than the University will be determined by the Registrar.

More than 350 veterans are now enrolled in the University and this number is expected to increase rapidly. The former service men and women have organized the "Illini Veterans of World War II" to help each other with mutual problems, to bring together those united by common interests, and to aid other veterans as they come to the University.

The campus also is the site of an advisement and placement bureau operated by the federal Veterans Administration. This office is receiving the co-operation of the University's own Personnel bureau.

OPENING FRUIT JARS EASY WHEN YOU KNOW HOW

So you can't get 'em open? Well maybe you thought that circular with the jars was advertising matter and threw it away without reading. Don't worry, we will tell you about opening jars and sealing them too, because chances are that part of the trouble with opening is due to failure to follow instructions for sealing. Surely you know about sterilizing everything, leaving plenty of head space, and having the rubbers wet. So we will skip that part.

There are two types of home canning jars, and all have a trade name lettered in the side. The ones with screw-thread necks are Masons. Those with glass lids held in place with wire bails are lightning type or Ideals.

Mason jars are used with one-piece zinc caps and rubber rings, or with two-piece metal vacuum seals, or with glass top seal caps. The glass top seal is sometimes called a three-piece cap because it is made up of glass lid, rubber ring and metal band.

When sealing a Mason jar with zinc cap, place a rubber flat on the sealing surface (you may call it shoulder or ledge), screw the zinc cap down tight, then turn it back about half an inch. This is done to prevent steam forcing the rubber out of place or causing the cap to bulge. The cap is screwed tight as soon as the jar is taken out of the canner.

Use Pliers to Open Jar

The easiest way to get the jar open is to use pliers to pull the rubber out. Small dime store pliers are best for this because friend husband won't be tempted to borrow them when he has to fix the fence. If you have no pliers, the next best way is to run the sharp point of a knife under (not over) the rubber, wiggle the knife sideways (not up and down), then unscrew the cap. If you can't manage this, turn the jar upside down in hot water for five minutes before unscrewing.

When sealing Mason jars with Glass Top Seal Caps, put the rubber flat around the rim on the under side (top side has the name on it) of the lid, then place the lid so the rubber lies flat between the top of the jar and the lid. Screw the metal band tight and then loosen by turning it back one-fourth turn. This band must be loose while the jars are in the canner. (Failure to keep this in mind has caused a lot of painful burns.) They are tightened after processing. The metal bands should be taken off the jars the next day after the canning is done. Yes, if the manufacturer's instructions are followed, the jars will stay sealed without the bands. When ready to open, run the sharp point of a knife between the top of the jar and the rubber. Move knife sideways as moving it up and down is likely to damage both jar and lid.

Opening Vacuum Seals

When using Mason jars with vacuum seals, place the lid white side down so that the sealing compound rests on top of the jar. Screw the metal band tight as it will go with ordinary hand pressure and leave it that way until the next day. Then take it off and leave it off. No, you don't tighten the band again after processing. Metal lids, especially those which are slightly rounded or domed, are flexible. The compound is softer than a jar rubber. The flexible lid and soft compound permit steam and air to seep out during processing. That's why the bands are tightened before processing and need not be tightened again.

When ready to open the jar, flip the lid off with a bottle opener, or punch a hole in it and pry it off. The hole is all right because vacuum seal lids should never be used a second time.

When using a lightning type or Ideal jar, put the rubber flat on the sealing surface. Keep the lip out of the way of the wires. Place the lid so that it rests on the rubber. Then pull or push the long wire up until it fits in the groove on top of the lid. Leave the short wire up while the jar is in the canner. Push it down against the side of the jar just as soon as you take the jar out of the canner.

When ready to open, push the lower bail up and the upper bail down, then pull the rubber out with pliers or rub the sharp point of a knife under the rubber, but remember moving the knife up and down may chip the jar or lid.

Elmhurst Post War Expansion

Postwar expansion to the tune of $2,500,000 is a major goal of Elmhurst College's Diamond Jubilee celebration, which opens in Elmhurst, Illinois, with the beginning of the 1945-46 school term, September 26. Officially the celebration will open in January, 1946.

Outstanding among plans for Elmhurst College, one of the Evangelical and Reformed church sponsored, four year colleges, is the building of a new memorial chapel, a science building, a dormitory, a heating plant, rehabilitation of present facilities of the College, and enlarged scholarship and endowment funds. Friends interested in Christian education and members of the Evangelical and Reformed church of which the St. John's church, Mokena is a member, are contributing to the campaign.

The board of directors, Dr. Timothy Lehmann, president of Elmhurst College, the executive committee of the Diamond Jubilee together with full committees and sponsors in several states are outlining plans for an appropriate celebration of the college's 75 years of service. A nation wide drive for funds and a varied program featuring five major events are main features.

Prefacing the official opening will be Elmhurst's Victory Homecoming in October. Following this, an invitation to several hundred thousand persons, including alumni of Elmhurst College, to share in the furtherance of Christian education will be extended.

Poultry House Lighting

keeps fall and winter
egg production at a peak

Egging them on to greater production by making his layers work from 12 to 14 hours a day is one of George Middleton's successful poultry-raising secrets, too. His automatic time clock wakes them up and puts them to work while he is still sleeping.

Ask Lester Schroeder of Peotone how he side-steps the slump in egg production that usually comes in fall and winter months; and he has the answer right at his finger-tips—his light switch. Poultry house lighting, he'll tell you, lengthens the hens' laying day and keeps them putting in more over-time on the egg production line.

Just a few small bulbs and an automatic time switch are all you need to get the birds up earlier in the morning—to keep them working later in the evening. Plan now, before the dark days set in, to light up your poultry house for extra eggs . . . extra profits.

Electricity for poultry house lighting and other farm chores is available to more than 87% of all the farms in the area served by this Company.

R. I. To Streamline Freight Service

An entirely new freight service, with the accent on speed and dependability, was announced by J. D. Farrington, Chief Executive Officer of the Rock Island Lines, as he revealed that plans are complete for a fleet of Rocket Freights to be placed in regular service on the system at an early date.

The new fleet of fast Rocket Freights like the Rock Island's nationally known fleet of stainless steel, streamlined passenger trains, will be powered by specially designed, high speed, Diesel locomotives.

"Since our Diesel powered Rockets were inaugurated in passenger service in 1937," Mr. Farrington said, in announcing the new freight service, "they have furnished ultra fast, streamlined, dependable service that has had great public acceptance, and they have been a major factor in handling our record volume of passenger traffic during the war."

"We realize," Mr. Farrington continued, "that, similarly, shippers too, require fast, efficient and dependable freight service, and we are preparing now to meet that demand. Fast Diesel engines, improved schedules and dependable performance, all combined in the Rocket Freights, are expected to win for this service the public approval and support the passenger Rockets have enjoyed from the very start."

Mr. Farrington explained that the Rocket Freights, equipped with radio of latest design, will operate between principal centers on the Rock Island's 8000 mile system, and will connect with the through transcontinental service of connecting lines.

Louis Rauch Home From The Pacific

It was our privilege a few weeks ago to have a nice visit with First Sgt. Louis W. Rauch, brother of Fred Rauch of Mokena, and son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Rauch of Blue Island. At that time Sgt. Rauch had just returned from nearly four years of service in the Pacific. He was 25 years old when on Oct. 7, 1941 he was inducted into the service and trained for six weeks at Camp Roberts, Cal. On December 12, 1941 he was assigned to the 186th Infantry of the 41st division at Fort Lewis, Wash., and from there until March 1, 1942 he patrolled the coast in Washington and Oregon, but there was no enemy activity and nothing happened.

It was April 23, 1942 that he sailed from San Francisco and landed at Melbourne, Australia May 14. From there he had training at Seymour and Rockhampton, Australia and joined the 28th Division and sailed for New Guinea arriving at Port Moresby, Jan. 13, 1943. Then they flew, crossing the highest mountain in New Guinea, the Owen Stanley, and landed at the Air Field, Dobodura. Then they marched to Buna, 12 miles, where they made camp and relieved the 32nd Regiment. In June 1943 they were transferred into the 158th Inf. and sailed to Milne Bay, New Guinea. Here they lived in hammocks until they made a clearing in the jungles and made a camp for more troops.

Louis, during this time of course contacted natives who he said were friendly and desired to help in any way they could. Their next move was by LCI boats, (Landing Craft, Infantry), to Kiriwina Island where they were to clear the island of Japs but as there were no Japs there, they made an air base for defense of the island and where fighter planes and bombers were stationed.

In February 1944 they went back to New Guinea landing at a native village called Arawe where they joined the 112th Cavalry and stayed there until April until they had the peninsula all cleared of Japs. No Japs were taken prisoners, they were exterminated so many at a time, they could not take time to bury them, but in a few days, in that climate the bodies disintegrated naturally. Our U. S. Army lost many also in this battle. This is the first time Louis saw a Jap and entered combat with them.

In April 1944, they went to Finschafen, New Guinea where their entire regiment was re-organized and brought up to strength and then on May 22, went to Sarni area in the same island and relieved a regiment there. During this drive, which lasted three weeks, Louis was a clerk in the office, taking care of the casualty list, reporting back to headquarters correctly the conditions and whereabouts of their men, etc.

Their next move was to Noemfoor Island where they lived in the jungle in huts made from Coconut logs, and where they cleared the Japs out of that coral island and where they did take some Japs prisoners.

It was two days after the Luzon Invasion 1945, that they landed at Luzon and where Louis entered into real combat. For 32 days they lived in fox holes. Their food was C rations and 10 and 1, a box containing three meals for five men. After this 32 days of constant combat when they were under the command of Gen. McNeiter, they were finally sent to a much needed rest camp in the Philippines.

In March 1945 they landed at Legaspi, Luzon and entered combat again for 2½ weeks. They stayed there until May and left from Polangui, Philippines, on a LCT boat for Manila. Here they stayed for two weeks at a casualty camp for deportation. It was July 24th when the good news finally came, and they sailed on that day for the trip home, landing in the good old USA Sept. 3, after being gone for nearly four years and when he first was inducted, the rule then was for "one year of Service."

We were very happy when Louis told us how he received the News-Bulletin quite regular during all the time he was away.

Louis was honorably discharged from Ft. Sheridan Sept. 8 having 107 points and then home to Blue Island. He has many souvenirs among which are a Jap Flag, Jap pistol, rifle, watch etc.

He wore the badges of: Combat Infantry, Good Conduct, American Defense, Asiatic Pacific ribbon with four stars and the Philippine Liberation.

We would say, a big job, done wonderfully and so grand to have him home again. We welcome him to the ranks of civilians and hope we are worthy of his presence and others like him.

Tokyo, Japan
Sept. 12, 1945

Dear Sir:

I thought I would drop you a few lines to let you know that I am fine. I have been getting around since I have been in the Army. I like the army fine but still like to be home better. I am now in Tokyo, Japan. It sure was a thrill to come here. I think I am the first one from Mokena to set foot in this country. I sure have seen a lot of things over here. And I sure enjoy being with the First Cavalry Division to land here. My outfit was the first to go into Tokyo.

I am just writing this to let you know that I would like your Mokena paper. I sure would like the news from home.

We'll have a parade and they took movie pictures of it. I suppose you will see them in the newsreels.

The Japs are funny people, but they seem to be glad that the war is over. They bow to the soldiers when we go by and salute.

Well I guess I will close now and get in bed. Just a few lines to let you know that I am thinking of the people at home. So I hope, I will see all of you soon. Wish I could be home for Xmas but that is out. So I will close now and hope I hear from you.

Yours truly,
Scotty

Invisible Heat Unit Developed At U. of Illinois

Radiant Baseboard, Inconspicuous, Easy to Clean, Gives Even Warmth.

Invisible home heating, with neither conventional radiators nor registers in a room, is the most recent heating development from research activities of the University of Illinois and the Institute of Boiler and Radiator Manufacturers. The new development is known as a "radiant baseboard" and has several advantages over conventional heating arrangements.

Room warmth comes from a baseboard made of hollow cast iron which is filled with hot water from a regular home heating boiler. Radiant baseboards replaced wooden baseboards along the bottom of outside walls in rooms of the I-B-R Research Home at the University during the severe past winter and proved completely successful.

They are painted to match woodwork of the room and are hard to distinguish from the trim they replaced. Pipe connections from the boilers are concealed in boxes at the ends of the baseboards. Installation was a relatively simple job.

The baseboard tested is slightly over 6 inches high and less than 2 inches wide, though appearing thinner because of molding at top and bottom. Future installations may be recessed into the wall and extend into the room no more than an average wooden baseboard.

As a heat source, the radiant baseboard is completely inconspicuous, and does not in any way interfere with furniture arrangement or room use, as radiators or registers sometimes do. It is as easy to keep clean as any conventional baseboard.

By spreading its warmth low-down in the coolest part of the room—the bottom of the outside wall—and providing a room-long source of heat, the radiant baseboard provides the most even floor-to-ceiling home temperatures ever achieved. This is important to comfort and health, especially if small children are in the home.

Church Ties Noted by 93% At Illinois U.

Is there an increased acknowledgment and interest in religion among young people? Statistics of religious preferences of students at the University of Illinois point in this direction, and the University's students, more than 85 per cent from homes in Illinois, are a cross-section of the young people of the state.

When registering in the University, each student indicates, among other data, his religious preference. Data from the beginning of the 1944-45 academic year shows that 93 per cent of the students on the University's main campus at Urbana-Champaign and 92 per cent of all its students indicated a "church preference."

This is the highest percentage since the data were first recorded in 1915, according to a sampling for key years. The percentage has increased steadily since the depression year 1933 when only 77 per cent of students indicated a religious choice.

Records for the Urbana-Champaign campus show that in 1915, before America became involved in the first World War, the preference total was 86 per cent; in 1920, after the war, 80 per cent; in 1929, boom-year, 79 per cent; in 1933, depression-year, 77 per cent; in 1938, year of the University's all-time high enrollment, 85 per cent; in 1941, year of Pearl Harbor, 89 per cent; and now, 93 per cent.

The University of Illinois has a unique place among state universities in the history of student religious welfare. As a state institution, it is non-sectarian. But at the Illinois campus the Church Foundation movement was born and has grown.

In 1906 the first church expressly for college students was established at Illinois, the University Presbyterian church, whose plant now includes McKinley Memorial church, McKinley foundation, and Livia Ball hall, a girl's dormitory.

In 1913 the world's first church foundation "a church home away from home" was established at Illinois in Wesley foundation of the Methodist church. Today it too has a beautiful building, the church foundation idea has spread throughout the world, and at Illinois there now are nine such church foundations. In addition, the YMCA and YWCA, each with a large building, are respectively the oldest active student activities for men and for women at the 77-year-old University.

HOME CANNERS ASKED TO "CARRY ON" BY F.D.R.

The food outlook is so dark throughout the world that, in January, our habitually optimistic President asked Victory Gardeners and Home Canners to "carry on until the war is won." Since then we have been told over and over that the only sure way to have enough vegetables for our own use is to grow and can them.

"But please," advises Gladys Kimbrough, Home Service Director for Ball Brothers Company, makers of glass fruit jars, "before you put your shoulder to the home canning wheel, take time to learn how jars and caps should be used. It is also smart to plan ahead, to buy ahead, so that canning time will not find you scurrying around trying to find equipment needed for the job. You may not find your favorite jar and cap unless you shop early in the season or it may be that merchants don't keep them because other styles sell better. If your home is on the West Coast, you may not see any all-glass lightning type jars because most of your neighbors prefer a Mason jar with two-piece metal cap. The opposite is true of New England; the lightning type is a best seller there. The majority of home canners in Southern, Central and Northern states have always demanded Masons with one-piece zinc caps.

Zinc Caps Supply Uncertain

"No zinc caps could be made at the beginning of the war. Now the backlog of zinc has grown large enough to permit the manufacture of a large quantity of caps. Will there be enough to supply the demand? That's a Seventy-Four Dollar question—nobody knows what the demand will be. But, we do know labor is scarce and shipping facilities are not what we would like them to be.

"A great many jars will have Glass Top Seal (glass lid, rubber ring, metal screw band) caps. There will also be Mason jars with two-piece metal vacu-seal caps—these are the ones with sealing compound flowed around the edge of the lid to take the place of a regular jar rubber. The nicest of the two-piece metal caps have dome shaped lids which pull down when a good vacuum seal takes place.

"Half pints are being made and so are wide mouth jars but neither is as plentiful as before the war.

"No matter what size home canning jar and style cap you decide to use, no matter whether it is your first or fiftieth year of canning, it will pay to choose a nationally known brand and to use it by the step-by-step instructions printed on the circular packed with the jars and on the cap carton. It cost the manufacturer money to supply those up-to-date instructions and it is likely to cost home canners time, money, and precious food if instructions are not followed."
